A flood insurance rate map is usually a map that lists properties in high-risk flood zones. The zone is determined by the zone of a previous map (first one produced in the 1980s), the elevation of a property, and the stream distance that flows into the property. The idea of a flood map is to provide a sort of "worst case" scenario for a property on the basis of what the area is considered to be like. It is a way to help people qualify for flood insurance. The way it works, sometimes, is that a property will be in an area with a map and the insured will be charged a premium (part of the flood insurance premium) based on the zone. This then is converted into a flood map, which is another number, such as a flood probability, which is then used to determine flood insurance premiums. A written explanation of the benefits and limitations of flood insurance is included in the contract at the time of purchase. Actual flood insurance rates are often computed by applying a base rate to a specific flood risk
