The present invention relates to a tail light module for a motor vehicle, which has a housing and at least one electrical contact element mounted in the housing. German Patent DE 42 08 681 C1 describes a tail light module for a motor vehicle which is integrated into the steering column of the motor vehicle. The tail light module has a housing, and a first light emitting element that is provided on the housing. The tail light module has electrical contact elements, which are formed from a plastic material and which make contact with a contact element-carrying surface of the first light emitting element by means of an interference fit. German Patent DE 199 57 042 A1 describes a tail light module for a motor vehicle that is constructed from several light emitting elements and light converging elements, and which is fixed in the body of the motor vehicle by laser welding. German Patent DE 42 08 683 A1 describes a tail light for a motor vehicle that is provided with a housing having a rectangular housing bottom in which there is disposed the first light emitting element, and with two plug connections which can be inserted and connected in a receptacle and are provided with spring-loaded snap-in elements, wherein the tail light has two holes, into which the plug connections can be slid. The tail

They prefer to earn money by. Progress toward poliovirus vaccine. The greatest challenge facing the global polio eradication program is the emergence of circulating vaccine-derived polioviruses (cVDPVs). cVDPVs are vaccine-like viruses that emerge in patients immunized with oral poliovirus vaccine (OPV). cVDPVs have caused >90% of all poliomyelitis cases caused by VDPVs reported in recent decades and an increasing number of outbreaks have occurred in OPV-using populations since 2000. cVDPV outbreaks are most likely to occur in developing countries with widespread, suboptimal coverage of oral polio vaccination, especially in areas where the wild poliovirus (WPV) is endemic. cVDPVs are also likely to spread through the community, resulting in localized epidemics. Without an effective cVDPV response, the program for polio eradication could fail. Protection against polio provided by the trivalent inactivated polio vaccine (tIPV) has been shown to be suboptimal, and non-vaccinated individuals can become infected with vaccine-derived poliovirus (VDPV). Efforts to build high-level immunity through traditional campaigns to all OPV-using populations, as well as expanded campaigns using tIPV, have proven somewhat successful in reducing the risk of VDPV transmission. However, cVDPV emergence will continue in OPV-using 9df0af710a
